

China Crude Oil Futures

The China Securities Regulatory Commission (“CSRC”) has publicly announced the long awaited crude oil futures contract offered by the Shanghai International Energy Exchange (“INE”) will be listed to trade on March 26th, 2018. The crude oil contract will be the FIRST Chinese commodity futures contract available to international investors. The CSRC also announced the Dalian Commodity Exchange has been approved to list an internationally available futures contract based on the world’s second most traded metal futures product, Iron Ore.

The announcements prove the door to the Chinese futures market is opening and confirm China’s desire to further integrate with the global derivatives market.

Huatai Financial USA, Inc. (“Huatai USA”), a subsidiary of Huatai Futures and Huatai Securities, offers bespoke solutions to clients participating in exchange-traded derivatives markets. Located in Chicago and registered as a US FCM, Huatai USA has developed a professional staff with a balanced mix of US and Chinese backgrounds designed to provide unique expertise. As one of a few Chinese futures firms with a US presence, Huatai has the resources and ability to facilitate futures trading on most global exchanges as well as domestic Chinese exchanges.

Many international investors view China as the largest and last unexplored market. However, trading Chinese markets is often considered overwhelming by international investors because it means overcoming legal, regulatory, infrastructure, technology, and cultural challenges that can be time consuming and expensive. Huatai USA’s goal is to guide clients through the initial complexities in hopes of building long-term, mutually beneficial relationships.
